Draft Program for Sixth [REDACTED] Arctic Indoctrination Course

1. My general impression of the draft program is that it meets the principal requirements for discussion of the area exceedingly well. I would suggest the possibility of a modest increase in the time devoted to science and telecommunications in the outline perhaps at the expense of a slight reduction to the time devoted to transport matters.

2. I do wish particularly to direct your attention to the general subject division of the course and to its heavy emphasis on construction and service activities in the area. It occurs to me that a reasonable division of the CIA contingent to this course would normally include a minimum of two representatives from Services Division until such time as we had two or three people highly conversive with this area in each of the branches of the division devoted directly to the services industries.
